W. D. TREGO AIRS HIS OPINIONS

Editor Glenrich Call:

Referring to your editorial in your paper of the 10th, in which you speak of Mr. ——— not liking some of the articles you have printed, will you, assuming that Mr. ——— has reference to the farmers who have taken you to task for not printing the answers to certain articles, I wish to call your attention very forcibly to your mistake in thinking that we object to anything which you have printed, but we do not object to your printing them at all, and making statements belittling the actions of delegations from our union, and then refusing to print them, or print only a portion of them, is a very serious matter. If you will come out in your editorial columns or over your own signature, you can say anything you like regarding us or the cause for which we are working. If you will only set the part of a man apart who is not a farmer, but a man who has both sides of the argument so they can form their own opinions. What we do object to is your standing behind the name of H. Spencer, or any other assumed name, and saying things which from your point of view may look right, but which from our point of view are not only very narrow minded, but very selfish.

We may have made mistakes in the past, and we may make mistakes in the future, but if we do we are not afraid to admit it when we are shown that we have made mistakes, but we do not feel that we have yet made any mistakes in the matter for which we have taken you to task in your paper, and if you will continue with the discussion, by printing our side as well as your side of the question, we are not at all alarmed about the public display of our side of the case.

If a paper is to be of any value to the community, but if it is used as a medium of exchange of ideas of the entire community, then it is not for the benefit of the entire community.

Yours respectfully,

W. D. Trego,

Game Warden Offers Some Kind Advice

Editor Glenrich Call:

Dear Sir: I am writing you a long letter, but I am sure you will find it interesting.

Would you kindly insert in your paper a few remarks for the benefit of hunters who are after wild game. There is a great deal of talk about these birds, yet a license is required for hunting any birds mentioned in the game act, and it is good for the year in which it is issued.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to be harsh on any one but I want it to be understood that it is not I, I am sure, who am aware that there are some people who make a practice of killing birds out of season, and also when in season shooting without a license. For the information of this I ask you to insert this letter in your paper. I do not care who the man is, who kills game shooting without a license or kills out of season, he can rest assured that if caught he will be fined or imprisoned. It is only a matter of time until he will be caught. As I know a few of those that are going on with this I am not mentioning their names, but I am sure that all honest hunters will be glad to see such a notice. I will be glad to see such a notice. I will be glad to see such a notice.

Football Games

A fine football game between the P. I. D. team of Banaroo and the Glenrich team was played in Banaroo on Good Friday before one of the biggest crowds ever gathered at that place. The score was 6 to 0, with the home on the short end of it, but the game was not at all one-sided as the home boys put up a plucky game against a far heavier team. The game was featured by a "punch" referee, who made about as many mistakes for one side as the other. The Banaroo team treated their guests in the style after the game. The line-up:

Jack Hooker

Geo. Moss Wagstaff

Herby S. Clement

Woodland McConnell J. Moss

Davidson Blair

On Easter Monday on the home grounds, Glenrich met Strathmore in a fast game, which ended in a draw 3 to 3.

Glenrich won the town and elected to play with the wind. Strathmore entered the contest, but fine play by Moss sent them back again, the ball going to Davidson who made a pretty run through the field and entered to Woodland, who beat the two backs and scored easily. The Glenrich team were playing strongly and several times the visiting goal under was called on to save, but there was no further scoring in this half.

Powered by the wind, Strathmore came back strong in the second half. After five minutes play they equalized the score and in ten minutes took the lead. The ball was kicked to Woodland, who beat the two backs and scored easily. The Glenrich team were playing strongly and several times the visiting goal under was called on to save, but there was no further scoring in this half.

WEST'S FIRST BOOSTER

"The country was so beautiful, pleasant and fruitful that it grieved me to see that the world could not discover such smiling countries to live in. This I say because the Europeans fight for a rock in the sea—for a barren land where, by change of air, they expend their sickness and die. Contravise, these kingdoms (the prairies) are so delicious and under so temperate climate, so full of all things, that the people live long and last, and rise in their ways. What a contrast this would be! What places are people would have instead of misery and poverty!"

Thus wrote Pierre Radisson, a native of Quebec, who probably was the first white man to view the Canadian West. The above report was made by Radisson in 1636, after his escape from a camp of Indians who had carried him from his home on a trip to the north shore of Lake Superior. His prophecy regarding the prairie has been verified by the world after a lapse of 270 years.

This Might Be American.

What are known in these parts as "the beautifiers" were to arrive in the morning, says a correspondent in the Manchester Guardian. The house had already been got into a state of intense discomfort. The head of the household, after arguing heatedly with the landlord to induce him to do the house through, now beavilled inwardly into too complete success. However, it had to be faced, and the next question was, Would the painters come to time? At daylight the next morning there was a thunderous knocking at the door. The head of the house recoiled, for he knew that now in a week his home would be habitable again. He heard the servant go down and open the door. A minute later there came a tap at the bedroom door.

"If you please, sir, it's the foreman painter."

"Well, he knows what to do. Tell him to start on any of the downstairs rooms."

"He's called to say, sir, that you can rely on him starting Monday next certainly."

The Pelican and Its Pouch.

Among the curiosities of nature must be reckoned the pouch of the pelican, which serves equally well as a net with which to scoop up fish and as a bag to convey food to its young. When not in use the bird can contract its pouch so that it is barely discernible, but when it is fully distended it will hold two gallons of water. When the pelican is hunting for food it flies slowly about twenty feet above the surface of the water, scanning its depths for any sign of its prey. As soon as a fish is seen there is a sudden folding of a pair of wings, a downward plunge with the speed of an arrow head first into the sea, the unerring marksman reappearing in a moment and dozing on the waves long enough to reveal a glimpse of a fish gliding down its capacious gullet and to shake the water from its disheveled plumage.

Better Than Gold.

Gold is generally looked on as the last word in costliness, but as a matter of fact, there are more metals dearer than gold than there are cheaper. The number of known metals is above seventy. Iridium, for instance, is three times as expensive as gold. Osmium is another metal much dearer than gold. It is by far the heaviest of all known substances, being more than twenty-two times as heavy as water. This metal has the peculiar property of being able to stand without melting the most intense heat known. Palladium, which is twice as costly as gold, is just the reverse. It is quite easy to make palladium vanish in steam. Being of a white, silvery color and untarnishable, it is used for the division marks on scales and delicate scientific instruments.—London Answers.

When the British Retreated.

One of the speakers before the banquet of the Massachusetts society of the Sons of the American Revolution told of an experiment which he made several years ago. He first consulted historical records and ascertained the exact time of day that the British left for Lexington. He then started to go over the same ground. From a fast walk he soon found it necessary to break into a run and then a sprint. Then he found himself getting so far behind time that he had to take a trolley car. He left Lexington at the time of day that the British left, and, although they are said to have reached Charlestown at 7 o'clock in the evening, he did not get there until after 7:30, thus proving that the British beat the time of the modern trolley cars.—Boston Traveler.

The Parrot's Threat.

Among the countless presents sent to Victoria by her subjects early in her reign was a parrot from a bird fancier at Bristol. "Polly was too shy on her arrival at court to speak, but when Victoria, struck with the beautiful plumage and fine symmetry of the newly arrived guest, entered, with great condescension, into conversation with her, Polly's shyness wore off, and she suddenly screamed, 'If you don't send £20 I'll go back.' The queen sent the £20—an inducement to all teachers to impart profitable instruction to their pupils."—Married Life of Queen Victoria.

The very laziest man recently encountered conducts a shoe store in a little town. A woman entered his shop one day and said she wanted to buy a pair of shoes. A Tale For Philatelists.

A story of the late Mr. Stanley Gibbons, the famous stamp dealer, was told in the London Times. A West Indian postmaster once returned his money order, stating that the stamp he had ordered did not exist, but the letter containing this statement was prepaid with a copy of the stamp in question.

How To Shave

Safety razors have been but a mixed blessing; they have made men forget how to shave. Apart from that, even a safety razor can only be used in one way if the best results are to be obtained.

Whichever kind of razor you use, you should be careful always to shave with the run of the beard. Never shave against the grain; it is bad for the skin, the beard and the razor.

A safety razor should be pressed flat against the face, and the action of a scythe should be imitated. That is to say, instead of running the razor straight down the face, use a semi-circular motion.

Perhaps the most important part of a shave is the lathering. The more the beard is lathered the softer it will become. It is false economy to seamp this part of the performance in order to save the trouble.

An ordinary razor should always be stropped before and after use, and the soap should be thoroughly taken off it by hot water. A razor is all the better for a rest occasionally.

Learn how to use a strop properly. The razor strop should hang from a point not higher than the waist-line. Shaving, and the care of a razor, is a science, and the man who can keep his razors in good condition is a man to be envied, especially in the winter.

Coining a Word.

Nothing could be more fallacious than the common notion that what ever the dictionary says is right. Every one of them contain much that is not right. Worcester, for instance, had a word meaning "illusion," which was copied from the cranky work of a man named Jodrell, who presented as one word every word phase not, according to his idea, in regular grammatical construction. He had made the word from Pope's line "The phantom nations are dead" and credited it to Pope. His obsession led to many other ridiculous perversions of language. The one mentioned was repeated in each work printed before 1890, when it was dropped.—Chicago Record-Herald.

South Waterville, York Co., N.B. (Special).—Mrs. Wellington Dunlop, an estimable resident of this place, has given an interview in which she states that she believes Dodd's Kidney Pills to be the best of all medicines. Mrs. Dunlop says:

"When I commenced taking Dodd's Kidney Pills I was in a terrible condition. I had been sick for over a year and had paid out more than one hundred and thirty dollars for doctors and medicine. I would get some better and then get just as bad as ever."

"The doctor said my trouble came from my stomach. His medicine relieved me for only a few minutes after I had taken it, and I got so that I was nearly insane."

"I had not taken Dodd's Kidney Pills two days till I was some better. I took twelve boxes in all, and I can truly say they have done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken."

EYES OF A PORTRAIT.

They Seem to Follow You, But That Is an Optical Illusion.

Why do the eyes of a painted portrait follow you? It is simply an optical illusion, easily explained.

To produce such an effect the eyes of the person represented in the portrait must be looking directly in front and not toward one side. So much for that. Now, under such circumstances the pupil of each eye is necessarily in the middle thereof, with as much "white" on one side as on the other.

Obviously this relation does not vary at all with the position assumed by the observer. The latter may stand far over on either side of the picture, and yet, from his point of view, there is as much "white" on one side of each eye as on the other, and the pupil is still in the middle. Such being the case, the painted image continues to look directly at him.

That is all there is to it. And exactly the same principle applies to the pictures often seen in advertising signs, which not only look but also point a steady finger directly at the observer, no matter where the latter may stand. Sometimes instead of a finger it is a pistol in the picture that is pointed.

This very curious optical phenomenon is exhibited most strikingly on the street cars. One enters, say, at the rear door and sees on a picture sign a man pointing a finger or a pistol at him. As the passenger goes forward the man actually seems to turn and follow him with eye and pistol, still pointing the latter at him when he has reached the front door of the car. It is a swing through an arc of ninety degrees or more.

You see, wherever the point of view may be (so long as the picture is in sight at all), the muzzle of the pistol or the finger tip is always optically central. The picture being a plane surface, the relation of finger tip or muzzle to the other parts of it is unaltered; hence wherever you stand the pistol or finger points at you.

In the palatial mansion of a New York multimillionaire there is a double staircase, the two flights joining at a landing above. On the wall is a huge painting of a flock of sheep coming downhill. The picture is a famous work of art and cost nobody knows how many thousands of dollars, but the thing about it that chiefly interests most people who see it is that, no matter which of the two flights (which are fifty feet apart) one ascends, the sheep seem to be running directly toward

Ideas of a Merchant-Farmer

The Nor-West Farmer in commenting on a letter in his columns over the signature of "A Merchant-Farmer" presents a phase or two of the question of co-operation that is not often put forward, and of which farmers must not lose sight. The writer of the letter is a country merchant and a farmer. He contends that as a rule the retail merchant does not make exorbitant net profits, and draws attention to the large number of failures among retail merchants as proof of his statement. Retail merchandising, as it has been conducted, is not quite such a sinecure as some farmers imagine, and the fact that many co-operative stores in this country have been failures, is evidence that this is true. Yet on the other hand, the fact remains that some such stores have been successes, proving that co-operative merchandising is not necessarily wrong in principle. An analysis of the store business will show that our merchants have been rendering service to the farmers under at least four distinct heads:

1. They have warehoused supplies, so as to present a choice of goods for the inspection of purchasers on demand.
2. They have supplied clerical service—exhibiting goods, measuring and wrapping, and, in some places, delivering them to the homes of the buyers.
3. They have supplied ownership of the goods themselves.
4. They have extended credit, thus throwing in banking advantages to customers.

If co-operative purchasing among farmers is to attain any substantial success in this country, it must, partly at least, be by eliminating some of these features.

For instance, that under heading four should be dispensed with altogether. Co-operative merchandising on a credit basis is practically certain to go ship-wrecked on the same rock of bad debts as has foundered many a private merchandising venture.

Then co-operative trading can offer savings under headings one and two also. The Grain Growers' co-operative movements in the different provinces have proven this absolutely. The cost which arises from carrying large stocks of blinder timber, fence wire, coal, flour, salt, shorts and bran, lumber and, to some extent, machinery, is mostly unnecessary. The collecting of orders, purchasing in car load lots, and distributing from the car will often effect a great saving, as has already been demonstrated time and time out number. The possibilities of entering into this kind of business have always been open to merchants, and the worst charge we prefer against them here is that they have shown timidity and in many cases lost a good opportunity to develop a strong connection with the farming public by entering to develop this line of business before the farmers have awakened to do it themselves. The co-operative movement shows its strength at this point only in contrast with the weakness of private merchandising, but the contrast is often very striking. Where the merchant will undertake to handle goods at retail prices in carlot orders on a basis of cash and delivery at the car door, we see no reason why the farmers should go into the trade, and do not think they would be anxious to do so. Because merchants oppose such business, notwithstanding the fact that there is a place for it, it thrives as co-operation.

Now as to co-operative marketing of farm products. Our correspondent is right again when he says that the city people of today are demanding so much service from the merchant that he must elevate his charges greatly on that account alone. The house telephone in the city has materially increased the cost of living by putting convenience ahead of economy of effort and common, every-day thoughtfulness. The experience of the meat merchant who said that a large proportion of his meat orders came just before the dinner hour and called promptly for rush delivery could be duplicated in every city, and people who indulge in this sort of thing have little good ground to grumble about the "high cost of living."

But the existence of this folly is in itself one of the very foundation stones upon which co-operative selling can be built up. If the average housewife buys her pounds of butter singly and has each sent around by motor delivery, is there not a place for the store where ten pounds of butter can be bought at a lower rate, to be carried home in the basket? We believe that there is.

The Busy Store--Tea Business

One of the most important staple articles handled in all retail stores is Tea. Good tea brings business to any concern. Tea that is no good drives away trade.

Realizing the correctness of these statements, we always are on the alert in buying our Teas. Lines which have been tested, tried and proven:

We also are importing direct from Ceylon our own tea, known as J. A. Ramsay's Special, packed direct to our order in Ceylon in 1s, 3s, 5s and 10 lb packages. We have spent a lot of our valuable time on this article, and have a tea that is going to be a trade drawer. 50c to $3.75 per package.
